THEATRICAL.

'Under Southern Skies."

At the Lyceum Saturday "Under South-ern Skies" was presented before large play in which sunshine and shadow are admirably blended by Lottie Blair Park-er, the talented woman who write it. A very satisfactory company presented the play.

"In Old Kentucky."

The most notable instance of enduring popularity in an American play is "In Old Kentucky," which will pay another visit to the Lyceum tonight. The play is now in its tenth season and continues to attract crowded houses everywhere This year the production will be given upon a more elaborate scale than ever

In addition to this, an entirely new scenic outfit has been prepared by John H. Young and the piece will be mounted company intact that will present the play here. The pickaniny band has been in-creased largely and many new and novel features added to the famous pickaniny

At the Academy Tonight.

That wonderful realistic play, "The Span of Life," which has never failed to attract large and enthusiastic audiences in this city, will be seen at the Academy Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. It is more than a year since "The Span of Life" has been seen here, and during that period of time it has been translated and produced in French, German, Belgian and Russian, and has also made a successful tour of Australia.

This is a record that cannot be claimed for any other melodrama ever written. There is no doubt that this favorite play will be greeted by large audiences. Matinees Tuesday and Wednesday.

"Human Hearts" at the Academy. Go to "Human Hearts" at the Academy Thursday, Friday and Saturday if you need the refreshment laughter brings. Go if you wish to be stirred by a dramatic story of unusual force. Go, if you wish to forget for a time your own care, or to find an outlet for the emotions you suppress in real life.

The Cowboy and the Lady. When S. Miller Kent, who will appear the Lyceum Wednesday was reading law with his uncle, Judge Stolsenburg, at New Albany, Ind., he became stage struck and ran away to join the Adele Payne company, receiving $5 per week and board. In the company was the late Odell Williams, who acted in the dual ca-pacity of actor and stage manager; Walups and down (mostly downs) the company stranded in Fort Wayne, Ind. The husband of the star, evidently wishing to cure his wife of stage fever, refused to help out with any more money. When Mr. Kent joined the company he was well supplied with cash and clothing, which the other members of the company soon found out and borrowed. On the closing of the company Kent had just $2. which was not sufficient to pay his fare home. But he made up his mind to travel as far as the money would carry him. Not having the necessary funds to pay the luxury of a hotel, he determined to walk around town that night and take the first train west in the morning.

and count ties the rest of the distance. In his walk he passed the fire engine house several times, looking in on each occasion. One of the firemen spoke to him and Kent was only too glad to pass away the time in conversation. The fireman learned his story and took him in, giving him a cot to sleep on. In the morning he struck off for the depot and upproached a freight conductor to whom he told his story, offering him the $2 The conductor sent'him up in the yard, teling him to catch the caboose as it pulled out, which he did, arriving at his home in Lafayette on the 2nd of January, the aniversary of his parents' wed-
